In just one hour on a crisp mid October day, Larry Colbert's life dramatically and significantly changed forever. Larry roared out of the parking lot at the Goddard Space Flight Center (NASA) in Greenbelt, Maryland on his powerful motorcycle headed to his annual eye doctor's appointment. It turned out to be a ride he'd never forget.

In that short examination, the ophthalmologist informed Larry he was legally blind and was rapidly speeding down the road to eventual blindness from Retinitis Pigmentosa, a hereditary degenerative disease of the retina.

Before being shocked into this unavoidable reality, Larry's life had been on the fast track. Employed as an unmanned satellite controller at the NASA facility, Larry's future seemed certain. He was married, had a young daughter, and in addition to his career actively pursued his collectable car hobby.

This life changing disease would cause him to face the inevitable questions. How would he be able to support his family without the ability to see? What would become of his love of cars, the joys of rebuilding engines, the feeling he relished of speeding down the road astride his beloved BSA motorcycle? Thus began Larry Colbert's long struggle to achieve the independent lifestyle he so desired!

Larry believes in living life to the fullest and encourages others to do the same.
